Z recenzji wydawniczych:

A comprehensive, well-structured, and thoughtful approach to the institutional, social, economic, and cultural transformations of Europe in recent times. The contributors realize the amplitude of these changes and help the readers grasp the short and long term implications of the unfinished European project. This collection of intellectually compelling and analytically insightful chapters is both timely and inspiring.

– Vladimir Tismaneanu, Professor of Politics, University of Maryland (College Park)

Thirty years after the collapse of communism, can the old 'Eastern Europe' or Central and Eastern Europe (CEE) still be considered a coherent region separate from the cultures and countries that surround it? How far have the societies, cultures, economies and political systems moved away from their communist past? This valuable and innovative volume provides a unique perspective on these important questions. It examines the view from within the region. But it also looks at these questions from the point of view of Western Europe as well as countries further removed – including Japan, China, and the Middle East. The result is a uniquely global perspective that one almost never sees in other volumes.

– Lucan Ahmad Way, University of Toronto

Meandering in Transition is a collection of articles that helps us understand what has happened in Europe and with Europe after the fall of the Berlin Wall and the disintegration of the Soviet Union. Transformed has been not only the borders, societies, identities and visions of the past and future, but also the scope of the region itself, as the old Eastern Europe has been joined by the republics of the western USSR. Back in the 1990s at the pick of the popularity of the “transitology” studies everyone wanted to know where the transition would eventually lead. Now we have an answer provided by some of the best scholars in the field. Essential read for anyone who wants to understand not only what happened with the region in the last thirty years but also what is happening there today.
